Coastal archaeology at Lepe

Much of our island's history is simply being washed away. Coastal archaeological sites are being destroyed by winds, waves and winter storms.

CITiZAN is a national response to this national threat. Our community archaeology project is training a network of committed volunteers to survey and monitor these fragile remains on a national series of key sites before they're destroyed.

Work on the seafront with the D-Day remains at Lepe

The CITiZAN south west team will be at Lepe on the 18th—19th July 2015

10am – 5pm

The CITiZAN south west team will be collaborating with the New Forest National Park Authority for a Festival of British Archaeology Event. CITiZAN will be offering training in archaeological survey techniques on the D-Day remains at Lepe. Whether you would like to learn about detailed measured surveys or simply help to photograph the eroding archaeological sites there will be plenty of activities for everyone. Training will be held from 11am each day, booking is recommended for this. Booking is not required for the other activities.
